Hsinchu Railway Station is not only one of the oldest railway stations in Taiwan, but also a national historical site. It has carried urban emotions for a century and is an important landmark of Hsinchu. Although the appearance of the railway station is very elegant in Japanese style, the interior has been affected by many messy signs and colors, which detracts from the station's elegance.

Recently, the Taiwan Design Institute cooperated with Taiwan Railways. They chose one of PBM's clients, EPOCH Lighting, to help redecorate the train station. EPOCH not only represents MIT's(made in Taiwan) outstanding luminous design; its unique aesthetics also allows the ancient city of Hsinchu to show pure white and simple texture under the beautiful light.

We invite you to click the video below to experience the transformation of Hsinchu Railway Station after the renovation.
